FEATURED SCHOLARS

JULIANA BARR received her Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin–Madison and her B.A. from The University of Texas at Austin. She joined the Duke University Department of History in 2015 after teaching at Rutgers University and the University of Florida. She specializes in the history of American Indians, colonial America, the Spanish borderlands, and women and gender. She is the author of Peace Came in the Form of a Woman: Indians and Spaniards in the Texas Borderlands (University of North Carolina Press, 2007) and co-editor of Contested Spaces of Early America (University of Pennsylvania, 2014) and Why You Can't Teach U.S. History without American Indians (University of North Carolina Press, 2015).

CAROLINA CASTILLO CRIMM is a retired professor of history who is using her many years of experience to write historical novels about eighteenth-century Spanish and Mexican Texas. The daughter of a California-educated Mexican father and American mother, she was born and raised in Mexico City. After her father died in 1963, her mother brought the family to Key West, Florida, where her mother taught elementary school. Crimm finished her BA at the University of Miami before moving to Texas to finish her MA at Texas Tech University and her PhD from The University of Texas at Austin under Dr. Nettie Lee Benson in Latin American history. She taught high school for twenty years before starting at Sam Houston State University in 1992. She is acclaimed for her teaching, winning local and statewide teaching awards, including the prestigious Piper Award as one of the best teachers in Texas. She is an entertaining speaker in high demand by educational, historical and community groups in Texas and across the country. She is married and lives with her husband in Huntsville, Texas.

ANDREW J. TORGET is a historian of nineteenth-century North America at the University of North Texas, where he directs a digital history lab and teaches classes on the U.S.-Mexico borderlands. The founder and director of numerous digital humanities projects—including Mapping Texts, the Texas Slavery Project, Voting America, and the History Engine—he served as co-editor of the Valley of the Shadow project at the University of Virginia and as the founding director of the Digital Scholarship Lab at the University of Richmond. The co-editor of several books on the American Civil War, he has been a featured speaker at Harvard, Stanford, Rice, Duke, and the National Archives in Washington, DC. In 2011, he was named the inaugural David J. Weber Research Fellow at the Clements Center for Southwest Studies at Southern Methodist University. His most recent book, Seeds of Empire: Cotton, Slavery and the Transformation of the Texas Borderlands, 1800–1850, has won eleven book awards including the Weber-Clements Center Prize for Best Non-Fiction Book on Southwestern America from the Western Historical Association.

SUSANNAH J. URAL, PH.D. is professor of history and co-director of the Dale Center for the Study of War & Society at the University of Southern Mississippi. A war and society scholar, Ural is the author of numerous books and articles on the U.S. Civil War era, including her latest monograph: Hood's Texas Brigade: The Soldiers and Families of the Confederacy's Most Celebrated Unit (Louisiana State University Press, 2017). Her latest projects involve a study of Mississippi's Confederate Home (beauvoirtveteranproject.org) and the digitization of the Mississippi Civil War Governors' Papers. Ural chairs of the editorial board of the Journal of Military History, and serves on the editorial boards of The Journal of the Civil War Era, the academic journal War & Society, and the magazine Civil War Times. She is the former president of the Mississippi Historical Society.
